At the end of the war,
One after another women threw themselves off
A clifftop on Saipan.
For virtue or duty or appearances
Or something.
Pursued by flames or men.
Because they had to leap they leapt.
A somewhere which is nowhere.
(The cliff always turned the women upside-down)
You see
Not one of the women reached the ocean.
Now that fifteen years have passed
I wonder what has happened?
To those Women."

24. "A word spoken stands as truth, firm, unless it is revealed to be a lie. Truth is a fixed, unchangeable state, It is that which resists any touching, any fiddling. It cannot be adorned, nor can it be garnished. It cannot be bent, rearranged, or moved about. [...] Speak only what you know. If a fact is thin, do not feed it to make it fat. If a fact is rich, do not take from it to make it lowly. If a fact is short, do not stretch it to make it long. Truth resists the hand that creates it, so that it is not bound by the hand. It must exist in the state in which it was first created."

25. Present your views on the social, historical and literary impacts that influenced Latin American countries to evolve their own literary tradition and identity.
